Consumers are being duped

Fish Are Difficult for Palate to Indentify Once They Are Cooked

Last week's speaker had to cancel so Gerald Godette presented a short impromptu program on what we might have heard had the speaker shown up. Gerald said that our bodies are made up of everything necessary to live. "We are what we eat, but we do not always know what we are eating. For example, how many of you can identify the fish you eat? Can you identify a spot from a croaker by taste? Fish are often mislabeled on the menu. You may order red snapper and be served tilapia, or some other species of fish. This happens in about 21 states...and about 33 percent of the fish served is not what the consumer ordered. Fish can be identified, however, by their DNA...and that will be the topic of the Dr. Schultz's talk when we are able to schedule him to speak.
