C-STEP off to great start with three first completers

Three Students Complete the C-STEP Program Now Ready to Enroll at University of NC at Chapel Hill

Darden Eure had the program last week. His guests were three students--Michelle Jarman, Sherry Patterson and Omar Roque-- who had completed the C-STEP program at the community college. They were accompanied by the C-STEP Program Director Beth Belcher and Melinda Rouse, an instructor at the college. Students who participate in C-STEP agree to earn appropriate associate degrees and participate actively in the program. If they complete the program successfully, they are accepted at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. They will be academically prepared and fully engaged in the campus community - both of which are strong indicators of student success. C-STEP offers students special events and advising, both at their home college and at Carolina, while they are pursuing their associate degree. C-STEP stands for Carolina Student Transfer Excellence Program. C-STEP partnership is currently limited to Alamance Community College, Carteret Community College, Central Carolina Community College, Durham Technical Community College, Fayetteville Technical Community College, and Wake Community College.

Melinda Rouse, Instructor at Carteret Community College, explains her role in the C-STEP program: "Another important consideration for any student considering transferring to a four-year university is how to pay for their education. Carolina guarantees to meet 100 percent of every admitted student's demonstrated need through grants, scholarships and loans."

Omar Roque and Michelle Jarman Lend their voices to the Rotary Chorus. Soprano voices are rare.
