Camp Invention Engages Students' Hands & Minds in the Creative Process

George Henderson had the program last week. His guests speakers were Kari Willis and Marsha Sirkin, teachers in the Carteret County School System. Together they coordinate a program called Camp Invention. The goal of the program is to encourage student interest in science at an early age.

"It's about inventing and creating new things," said Camp Director Marsah Sirkin. "The activities help to create forward-thinking skills and creativity to solve problems. It's also about learning teamwork and leadership skills. The program gives young inventors a new perspective on everyday objects. We try to get students to think outside the box. We take recyclables and other items from home and say, instead of using it this way, what can we do with it?"
